RACISM & THE CHURCH

With all the public outcry over racism in recent weeks, Bishop Barron shares that people are reaching out to him and other Bishops with concerns and comments like, “making a statement is all fine and good, but what are you and the other bishops going to do about it?” Bishop Barron shares that Bishops are doing a lot about racism, working with politicians, community leaders, etc. for policy and cultural changes. “But, he writes, what struck me again and again as I read these rather taunting remarks is that these folks, primarily lay men and women, are putting way too much onus on the clergy and not nearly enough on themselves.”

“According to ... Vatican II, the clergy are, by ordination, ‘priests, prophets, and kings.’ As priests, they sanctify the people of God through the sacraments; as prophets, they speak the divine word and form the minds and hearts of their flocks; and as kings, they order the charisms of the community toward the realization of the Kingdom of God. Accordingly, the immediate area of concern for bishops and priests is the Church, ... the community of the baptized. Now the laity, by virtue of their baptism, are also priests, prophets, and kings (Lumen Gentium, 31)—but their sanctifying, teaching, and governing work is directed ... outwardly to the world. [...] their task is the Christification of that realm. They are charged to take [what] they have received from the priests and bishops and then go forth, equipped to transform the world and thereby find their own path to holiness.

“Great Catholic lawyers, [politicians, professors, physicians and nurses, investors and financiers, writers and critics, entertainers..., are] meant to bring Christ to the society and the culture. And when I say “Catholic” here, I don’t mean incidentally so or merely privately so, but rather vibrantly and publicly so.” — The question to ask, he says, is What then am I doing about it? He goes on to suggest a solution.
